

Red Intelligence Work Easier, Cabell Says

Air Force Gen. Charles P. Cabell, deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, said Friday Russian intelligence agents have a somewhat easier job than those of the CIA because of America's free press.

"They have so many things handed to them in the American press and by other means," he said. "We don't have such an aid—we have to dig for our information."

Gen. Cabell said, however, he thinks the CIA is a better organization than its Russian counterpart.

"I know that we have to be better than the Russians."

Recently promoted to four-star rank, the general has served as the CIA's deputy director since 1953.

Friday night he will be principal speaker at a banquet in Fort Worth's Ridglea Country Club honoring the Texas Rangers. The dinner will be sponsored by the Texas Law Enforcement Foundation.

At noon he was to be guest of honor at a private luncheon in the City Club here.

Saturday the general plans to remain in Dallas to see the Texas-Oklahoma football game in the Cotton Bowl. He will return to Washington Sunday.

He is a brother of Earle and Ben Cabell, Dallas dairymen and realtors. The Dallas-born general attended the old Oak Cliff High School and was graduated from West Point in 1925.
